Credo Statement~

In the past years, a major way that I've grown is through ending and beginning friendships. Through this church I have made a lot of friends and the program here has changed my views on what makes a good friend in multiple ways. I believe your friendships truly influence the way you are, and choosing who your friends are shows a lot about you. The beginning of high school was a breakthrough for me. I realized that some of my friendships were there because I had to be friendly with people for school. Most were based on mutual respect and joy. The people I have met in high school are kind and always make me laugh. The really amazing thing to me is how we always have each other's backs. I believe in people even though people can be problematic. There are many problems people have created, especially discrimination based on race or sex or sexuality or class, and environmental destruction on a mass scale that might end up killing us all. But I believe in people who stand up for complete strangers, who volunteer to help others out, and good friends who would do anything for each other. I also believe in the power of music and the arts to distract people from pain and to bring joy into the world. Many of my friends are dancers, musicians and artists because we go to... I want to be the kind of person others can count on. I want to create music to make people happy. I want to stand up to racism as much as I can and stand up for the environment and animals.
